MLA Citation Guide

A book by a single author

A book by two authors

A book with two editors

Bible

Chapter in an edited book

Electronic Book (ebrary)

Google Books

A print article in scholarly journal

Scholarly articles from databases

A print article in a magazine
Adler, Jerry. “The Fight Against the Flu; The lethal H5N1 virus was found last week in birds in Europe. So far it has spread between humans in only a few suspected cases, but with no cure in sight, global health officials are nervously watching their borders and preparing for the worst.” Newsweek 31 Oct. 2005: 39-45. Print.

Same article in a database
Adler, Jerry. “The Fight Against the Flu; The lethal H5N1 virus was found last week in birds in Europe. So far it has spread between humans in only a few suspected cases, but with no cure in sight, global health officials are nervously watching their borders and preparing for the worst.” Newsweek 31 Oct. 2005: 39+. Research Library. Web. 1 Nov. 2005.
Magazine article without an author from a database

An article in a newspaper

If pages in a newspaper article do not appear on consecutive pages, put a plus sign (+) at the end of the first page number.

Same article in a database

CQ Researcher database

Opposing Viewpoints database

Reference book or encyclopedia

Web Site

Film or Video Recording

Government Documents/ Legal sources

Disclaimer: the ultimate authority for the correct method of citing sources is your professor.

Source: MLA Handbook for Writers of Research Papers, Seventh Ed. Please note that according to this edition of the MLA Handbook, it is no longer necessary to list the URL when you cite an Internet source.

7/29/2013